The friendship that George and Lennie share forms the core of the novella, and although Steinbeck idealizes and perhaps exaggerates it, he never questions its sincerity. From Lennie's perspective, George is the most important person in his life, his guardian and only friend.

In this story of initiation, a Woman from Berkeley-the reader never learns her first name-the mother of two children, is restive and dispirited; her marriage to Lederman, a strong-willed rancher twenty years her senior, has long since lost its physical and spiritual vitality. Devoted to work, Lederman once morally swayed her, "kept her in an invincible slavery." Now she yearns for adventure. Beyond the confines of her ranch live the Chilchui Indians, and she determines to ride out, alone, "to wander into the secret haunts of these timeless, mysterious, marvelous Indians of the mountains." Questions Chapter 3
In three parts, the Woman, on horseback, comes on three Indians who seem like figures of fate. One of them, a young man with eyes "quick and black, and inhuman," agrees to guide her to the Chilchui, so that she may "know their gods." Controlling her horse, the Indian leads her to a shelter where other Indians, wearing what appear to be loincloths, are indifferent to her. After a sleep in the "long, long night, icy and eternal," she is aware that she has died to her former self and can never again return to her civilization.
