Background: The ideal body is characterized by a muscular physique and defined anterior abdominal wall. Despite diet and exercise, many are unable to achieve this desired result. Liposuction with abdominal etching is used to achieve high-definition abdominal aesthetics. The etching technique is performed with liposuction in a superficial plane, to create indentures consistent with "six-pack abs," or definition of vertical abdominal lines.

As abdominal swelling decreases, the fascial edges are pulled closer together.

The Wittmann patch is opened at least once every 24 to 36 hours for dressing changes, procedures, inspections, and reapproximations. When the two fascial edges are close enough, the remaining patch material is removed and the abdominal wall closed fascia-to-fascia.
